by JASPER DE WAARD

Meet Sensato; A friendly, trustworthy and wise Italian man with a peculiar love for Renaissance typography, ancient wines and dangerous women. Sensato was born and raised in the industrial city of Rotterdam, the Netherlands, but his soul has always been in Italy. It should come as no surprise then, that it took Sensato a visit to the beautiful town of Urbino to fully get to know himself. During his five day stay at this magical place, Sensato became the wise man he is today. So wise, in fact, that he lost all excess weight. So enlightened, in fact, that he started turning completely bald a couple days later. Or bold, if you like. But it didn't make him any less sexy, on the contrary, he gained in flare and added swashes to his arsenal of styles. As a logical result of feeling lighter, he also gained in speed. Sometimes he ran so fast, he appeared to be slanted. He wasn't slanted, off course. He was italic, even on his baldest days. Or boldest days, if you want. And now, after having completed his transition, he is in for a new adventure, and almost on his way to London, for the summer. What London will bring Sensato, I don't know. We'll have to wait a while to find that out, but surely he will return wiser and more complete than he's ever been before...
