

A New Sample.

I have finally completed all eight weights in this family.

I might call it “Newt’s extended family”.

Here comes more of that little story. I’m setting it in the two newest weights. Shifts weight for no narrative reason from time to time.

Well, now I was in the deep woods, still with the same problem I’d had before, which was that I needed to get back to the present day somehow. In my mind I connected getting back to that waterfall with getting back to 6/19/2007, but I had no idea whether there was an actual relation. My best option was still to backtrack. So I decided I would. But first, I realized, I needed to plan ahead, so I wouldn’t always be losing my presence of mind and ending up doing stupid things like running into an alien forest like a headless chicken. First, I realized, I needed some way to defend myself from whatever came at me. Lacking a gun store, I decided a big stick would be my best bet. I looked around. There were lots of sticks to choose from. I found one that looked pretty sizable, but when I picked it up it was about half as heavy as I’d expected, and when I took an experimental swing at a tree, it broke in half. I found a stick from a different tree. This one was about right: hefty and sturdy, and long enough to use as a walking stick. It had a weird, scaly grip to it, though, which took a bit of getting used to. I decided to pick up some rocks too, as soon as I found some: probably when I got back to the creek.

So now my next step was, again, going back the way I came. I walked off in the general direction of the way I’d come in. I tried making sure that I was coming the right way by looking for things I’d seen on my mad dash in. But I hadn’t been paying enough attention. How could I have been? I was paying more attention to other stuff, like running away from whatever that was. I realized I was probably heading the wrong way by a few degrees, maybe as many as 45. But I had no better plan, so I kept on going. I kept an eye out for anything, anything at all. Eyes. I couldn’t see them except from the corner of my own eye, but I could feel them all the time. The forest wasn’t especially dark, but it was pretty thick, so I couldn’t see very far into it. At the edge of my field of sight was where there were eyes. I was still barefoot, so I was able to walk very quietly and focus on trying to hear hostile noises. Walking barefoot in this forest was certainly different from doing it in the forest I was used to. I think I actually liked it better. For one thing, I don’t think I ran into any plants with thorns. Underfoot, when I walked on low-growing plants, there was an interesting texture, sort of like shag carpet, but less fine and tougher. The dirt was harder than 2007 dirt, but grainier too. I was starting to get used to this era, which made me a bit worried, but I knew I didn’t want to stay.

About 10 minutes in, I got my first attacker. It came from behind, but I heard it rustling through the groundcover before it got to me. I tensed and turned around, without any idea what to expect, but resolved not to be startled into oblivion. It was about two feet long, an amphibian or reptile of some sort. It didn’t look like it would be very quick, but it was, and it was heading toward my leg. It was almost on me when I was turning around, and I had to react instantly. I gave it a whack to remember on its head. It fell flat for a second, and then got up and ran off the other way, making an odd noise that I never want to hear again. And I turned and kept walking, shaking a bit but feeling better, feeling in command. Finally, I was getting good at keeping my head on in these kinds of situations.
