

Vulpa

Schizotype Fonts

The Italic now features Swash Capitals for certain letters. As before, spacing is rudimentary and kerning is so far non-existent. For the past week or so I've been steadily trudging through the creation of a bold weight, and that is just about at the stage where I'm pleased with the overall design and it's ready for critique.

Swash Capitals:

*Apricot Banana Clementine Damson Exfoliate
Foxtail Grenadine, Helvetica Jasmine Katherine
Lovely Meringue Norway Pegleg Queen Roman
Sextuplet Time-machine Vulpa Wednesday
Xylophonic Yellow Zanzibar*

Now the bold... Spacing is rudimentary and kerning is absent:

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

“abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz”

Numerals & Punctuation (story so far)

{0123456789} [!'"%^&*#'?/|><]

Follow me! @SchizotypeFonts

The Modern English word "fox" is Old English, and comes from the Proto-Germanic word fukh – compare German Fuchs, Gothic fauho, Old Norse foa and Dutch vos. It corresponds to the Proto-Indo-European word puk - meaning "tail of it" (compare Sanskrit puccha, also "tail"). The bushy tail is also the source of the word for fox in Welsh: llwynog, from llwyn, "bush, grove". Lithuanian: uodegis, from uodega, "tail", Portuguese: raposa, from rabo, "tail" and Ojibwa: waagosh, from waa