HERMANN ZAPF is one of the most important and prolific type designers of the 20th and 21st centuries. His distinguished career in type design, calligraphy, and book design, stretches nearly seventy years. Melior, Optima, Palatino, Zapfino – and the beloved Zapf Dingbats – are just some of his most remarkable designs, and he has designed Latin, Greek, Russian, and Arabic typefaces. He has received virtually every award possible for typeface and calligraphic design and is an honorary member of over twenty-five type and lettering societies. Zapf has worked for Microsoft, Stanford University, Hallmark Cards, and many other clients. He has recently collaborated with Linotype to extend and reinterpret some of his earlier classic designs.

MATTHEW CARTER is a type designer with fifty years' experience of typographic technologies ranging from hand-cut punches to computer fonts. He is a principal of Carter & Cone Type Inc., in Cambridge, Massachusetts, designers and producers of original typefaces. His type designs include ITC Galliard, Snell Roundhand, Bell Centennial, Big Caslon, Skia, and Miller. For Microsoft he designed the screen fonts Verdana, Tahoma, and Georgia. Carter is a Royal Designer for Industry and a recipient of the AIGA medal and the Type Directors Club medal. He has taught for many years in the graphic design program at Yale University School of Art.

JERRY KELLY is an award-winning designer, calligrapher, and printer based in New York City. His work varies from fine books and pamphlets to brochures and ephemera for clients such as the Grolier Club, the Morgan Library, Rochester Institute of Technology, Columbia University, and the Library of America. Prior to working independently, he was a designer for the Stinehour Press and the Press of A. Colish. He has taught at Pratt Institute, Parsons, and Queens College. The author of several books and numerous articles on printing, calligraphy, and related subjects, Kelly studied with Hermann Zapf from 1979 to 1989 at special summer courses at RIT.
